BE ALL IN

TO BUILD SAFER FUTURES FOR THE NEXT GENERATION.

WHO WE ARE

The All In program is developed and delivered by Women's and Girls' Emergency Centre (WAGEC) in partnership with early childhood education professionals, First Nations cultural and Early childhood education experts, and primary prevention practitioners.

WHAT WE DO

All In contributes to the primary prevention of gender-based violence in NSW through delivering gender equality and respectful relationships education to influential adults – including families and carers, in early childhood education and community settings.

All In supports the prevention of violence by providing influential adults with practical tools to support children in developing healthy, respectful relationships and valuing people of all genders from their early years.

HOW WE DO IT

In free, face-to-face workshops, our experienced facilitators lead discussions and activities tailored to your needs. Workshops can be delivered across NSW at your preferred location.

The sessions will enhance your skills, knowledge and confidence around primary prevention and help you challenge rigid gender stereotypes that lead to gender-based violence later in life.

HELPING CHILDREN BUILD HEALTHY, RESPECTFUL RELATIONSHIPS

WHY WE DO IT

All In seeks to address a widespread and pervasive problem that harms us all: gender stereotypes.

Rigid gender stereotypes like “girls are bossy” or “boys don’t cry”, influence how children express themselves. Gender roles that teach girls to value their appearance, and boys to act tough, creep in from an early age.

Evidence from Change the Story also shows that gender stereotypes are a key driver of gender-based violence.

The good news, is that by teaching children about healthy, respectful relationships and challenging gender stereotypes, we can prevent gender-based violence before it starts.

All In works by promoting gender equality from the early years and supporting families and communities to build safer futures for the next generation.

EVIDENCE-INFORMED PRACTICE

All In is grounded in the national Early Years Learning Framework (EYLF) and Our Watch’s Change the Story and Changing the Picture, primary prevention frameworks.

The program is informed by The Anti-Bias Approach in Early Childhood (ed. Dr Red Ruby Scarlet) and the Wiyi Yani U Thangani framework for First Nations Gender Justice.

BUILDING SAFER MORE INCLUSIVE FUTURES

Primary prevention is about stopping violence before it starts. We do this by addressing the underlying or root causes of violence.

All In recognises that every community is part of the solution towards building safer, fairer and more inclusive futures for the next generation.

That's why we work with families, carers and influential adults, supporting primary prevention education across all areas where we work, live and play.
